1.3 Summary

High Impact Crime, abbreviated to HIC, includes criminal offences that have a major impact on the victim and often also on their immediate environment. HIC refers particularly to the following trio of crimes:

- RESIDENTIAL BURGLARY
- STREET ROBBERY
- (ARMED) ROBBERY

This Book of Basics unites national and international knowledge and experience in the area of HIC to help ensure that the decline continues in the coming years and a sustained reduction in HIC is achieved.

The perception of safety of victims of common crimes is often more negative than that of people who have not been victims. Not only the extent of HIC, but also the consequences for victims are more than sufficient reason to tackle these forms of crime more effectively.

→ EXAMPLE

North: muggings of and by young people

Street Robberies in North

In the northern part of a large city in the west of the country, young people were being robbed by other young people. For example, a 19-year-old victim was robbed in the autumn of 2020 en route to Sports Park North. His father said:

“He was riding his scooter with a friend. Because it was bad weather, they decided to shelter under the viaduct. Soon afterwards, two young guys arrived on their bikes and asked what time it was. My son knew straightaway something was up. The moment he decided to run away, a gun was pointed at his chest.”

Another young victim spoke about how he was cycling next to the tennis court one evening when a boy on a bike bumped into him. Moments later, another boy cycled up to him and pulled out a gun.

“Give me your fucking money, your fucking phone and your fucking headphones.”

The example presented here has been deliberately anonymised. Names and names are known to the authors of this Book of Basics. We can only accept requests for removal or alteration from the media, contacts with the police national and local, the municipality as well as academic boards.

3.8 Summary

When you pay more attention to HIC, you make decisions based on the following questions:

- How often does it occur? • How serious is it? • What type of unrest is caused?

Crime is not spread evenly in terms of time/location/people. In identifying and prioritising crime, take into account to what extent there are:

- Hot times • Hot places/hot spots • Hot shots/hot groups • Hot victims

Based on the integral data analysis that has been made, the local triangle determines what types of crime are to be tackled. The triangle decides on the main lines, policy choices and strategy, yet not on concrete measures. For the latter, they appoint a project group to form an 'vital coalition'.

There are various types of police data that can help with scanning and prioritising:

- Data portal (everyone) • Area Scan & CAS (police) • Early Warning (police)

These tools help answer questions about:

- Increases over time • Similar municipalities/neighbourhoods • Type of perpetrator(s)/victim(s) • Concentration of crimes/offender(s)/victim(s)/stolen goods

Please note! When using police data, strict regulations apply that are tightly laid down in the Police Data Act and the GDPR.

If someone wants to take into account the seriousness of a crime, then they can make sure that the costs/damages and/or the punishments are made known. In essence, it is about analysing the HIC problem in both a quantitative and qualitative sense.

A broader consideration is required within the framework of the local integrated safety policy. By not only looking at police figures, a broader picture of local crimes becomes much sharper and clearer. This is a form of 'triangulation'. For example, think of:

- The Safety Monitor (VeiligheidsMonitor) from Statistics Netherlands • Local (victim) surveys

Dat begint altijd met een goede degelijke analyse en gezamenlijke vaststelling van wat nu precies het probleem is ter plekke. Alleen zo wordt de op zo'n analyse gebaseerde gezamenlijk aanpak effectief. HIC is – en blijft! – daar belangrijk genoeg voor." The footer contains "© 2021 ProHIC" and "Naar bovenkant ↑".
